

ABSTRACT

If a printing instruction is received when a toner cartridge that needs to be replaced has been moved to the replacement position and is ready for replacement, the control unit of a printer controls each toner cartridge to move to a location where printing is possible and controls the toner cartridge that needs to be replaced to move back to the replacement position after the specified printing is completed.